NEW YORK, New York-German dyestuff plants, all unharmed by the war, are seeking to regain Germany's grip on the dye trade of the world according to Major T. W. Sill of the chemical warfare service. Major Sill was a member of the inter-allied commission appointed to investigate the production of war materiel in the German chemical plants in the areas occupied by the American, British, French and Belgian forces. He has just returned from that work. In a statement issued through the American Chemical Society, Major Sill says he found the dye factories in German territory, on both banks of the Rhine, undamaged by air raids or any other war causes, with machinery in perfect condition, and with adequate personnel of experts and of trained operatives ready on the ground to turn their entire activities into the manufacture of colors and medicines.

Walsh, the chairman of the delegation, was unable to inform a representative of The Christian Science Monitor yesterday. It is for the British Premier himself to decide, states Mr. Walsh, as the initiative came from him in the first place.

The American delegation had no object, Mr. Walsh protested, in seeking such an interview, but when Sir William Wiseman, liaison officer beween British and American representatives in Paris, invited himself and two colleagues to meet the Premier, they could, he said, do no other than accept such an invitation coming from so distinguished a source. In the meantime, pending the interview, Mr. Lloyd George had proposed they should visit Ireland and see conditions at first hand, particularly in Belfast.

The German delegation. the note sets forth, cannot recognize that from any responsibility of the former German Government for the origin of the war there can be deduced on the part of the allied and associated powers the right to claim indemnifi-cation for losses suffered through the The note declares further that the peace terms provide no proof of Germany's responsibility for the war and requests that the reports of all the allied commissions which investigated the responsibility for the war be communicated to the German delegation. Another note declares that the portion of the treaty dealing with territorial annexation is not in accordance with President Wilson's 14 points. Under the financial and economic conditions of the treaty, it is further set forth, it seems impossible for Germany to have enough gold on hand at the end of 15 years to repurchase the Saar Valley mines from France, and that if she does, the indemnification commission which will still dominate Germany will not permit this gold to be used for such a purpose.

Necessity for Evolving Plan of Industrial Cooperation

Special to The Christian Science Monitor from its Australasian News Office CHRISTCHURCH, New Zealand-Industrial unrest in New Zealand has found expression in disputes involving railway workers, tram-men, miners and drivers. While this friction has been largely sectional in character, and strikes have been avoided in many cases, the necessity for facing industrial readjustment is being recognized by thinking men of all classes in New Zealand.

In an address delivered before a conference of industrial corporations, meeting in Christchurch, Mr. I. W. Jamieson, the president, emphasized the necessity for immediately evolving a plan of cooperation which would appeal to thinking employers and employees and check irresponsible attempts to introduce into the Dominion a form of bolshevism. It was agreed. he said, among thinking men, that some system of profit-sharing must be introduced to awaken responsibility and thought. Jesus' statement was an absolutely metaphysical one, scientifically exact in every respect. But to the unmetaphysical Pharisaic mind, reasoning, all the time, in terms of matter, and entirely misapprehending the premises on which the argument was founded. instead of revealing a spiritual truism. it exposed a mere blasphemous intent. It is so easy, in short, to become Pharisaical, in judging the Pharisees, that it is wiser to stop and try to understand what Christ Jesus himself said about judgment.

At the yery outset the task is beset with a warning and another superficial contradiction. Jesus himself said "Judge not, that ye be not judged": here is the warning. But he also said. "Judge righteous judgment." How, then, may a man judge righteously if he is not to judge? Of course there is no contradiction at all. The one saying is a perfect complement of the other, and each necessarily implies the other. Only the most intensely superficial reading of the evangelists could discover the slightest conflict in their phrasing of the great Teacher's words. Exactly the same accusation has been leveled at all great teachers, and this by reason of the depth, not the shallowness, of their thought. It was leveled, centuries before Jesus, at Washington, encircled by the insignia Eddy, and this, curiously enough, be-

Adam and Eve

THE statesmen of the world are slowly preparing to depart from the great peace council which is to bring Armageddon, as superficial statecraft persuades itself, to an end. Leagues of nations, international disarmaments, social reforms, economic fellowship, are in the ir. All sorts and conditions of men are engaged in building every sort and condition of ideal commonwealth. Yet not one of these commonwealths reaches down to the bed rock of Principle. Each and every one of them is superimposed, like the London or Paris of today, on the vestiges of a past civilization. Now if humanity is going to build a sound social edifice, it must dig down below the rubbish of the feudal system, the dark ages, or the civilizations of the ancient world, until it comes in contact with those passions, those characterstics, those innate propensities, which acting as the mental lava bursting out of mortal mind, have cooled down, under various educational restraints, into the civilization in turn of Crete and Egypt, of Syria and Assyria, of Greece and Rome; of the Anglo-Saxon and the Latin.

The wise men of the world, then, are studying the question in sobriety and earnestness, but none the less in the sobriety and earnestness of a statecraft which, after more than half a score of centuries, still insists on being guided by externals, and on persuading itself that an effect which seems to produce an effect is a cause. A single example will be sufficient, out of the hundreds available, to make this clear. The historian will tell you that the Thirty Years' War was a religious war, which grew out of the struggle between Protestantism and Romanism for domination. But Protestantism and Romanism were not causes but themselves effects. The one a protest against the autocracy of the other. They were only the observable results, in the Seventeenth Century, of the effort to control those passions of fear, of lust, of cruelty, which had in the twilight of civilization made the moon the arbiter of human destinies, or set the priest of Nemi to guard the "Golden Bough:-

"The priest who slew the slaver.
And shall himself be slain."

Now any person who has grasped the significance of the worship of the moon, or of the guardianship of the "Golden Bough," knows that he has pierced beneath the foundation of London and Paris, beyond the philosophy of Greece or the pax Romana, below the dust heaps of Babylon and Nineveh, to those fundamental emotions which swept the primitive human mind, as it saw the moon rising out of the black abyss of waters, and built its ziggurat in worship. Centuries later the Hebrew writer took the volume of Babylonish tradition, and purified it for his own purpose in the story of creation in the lible, though leaving it, as Professor Sayce points out, still purely material. And then, a century perhaps later, there came another writer, who wrought the old material still purely material. And then, a century perhaps later, there came another writer, who wrought the old material into a new version of creation, as Tennyson took the figure of the old sinful Arthur of the earlier legends of the Round Table, and made of it "the blameless king."

There, at any rate, the true version and the material story of the creation stand unto this day, placed in justantial.

story of the creation stand unto this day, placed in juxtaposition, as a famous scholar has said, so that all who run may read. And so, the man with eyes to see may find a further stage in the development of the great carnal truggle, the struggle of the flesh against the Spirit, which has been typified in human relation, ever since, in the language of Mr. Rukin, the man and the woman stood in the gateway of Eden long ago. For here, whether the world recognizes it or not, is the root of the convulsion which has been shaking it, from the beginning, the sex struggle which is developing with such intensity today. What the wise men do not see is that this struggle is the key to all struggle. And they fail to see this because they are imbued with the rib theory of Jehovistic Genesis, the theory of man as superior to woman, instead of the luminous explanation of the Elohistic document, So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.

Mesmerized by the rib theory, which has been handed down throughout conturies of dogma, man has asserted his supremacy almost without being conscious of it, and woman has accepted her inferiority almost without realizing what it meant. Even the better instincts of the male as expressed in the institutions of chivalry were weighted with a perilous recoil for they tended to make of woman not a companion and an equal, but a doll or an etherealized ideal. Yet, all the time Eve, filled with all the passions of Adam, was waiting only opportunity to display them. That opportunity came with Armageddon. In Armageddon the world was stripped, in a good part, of its pretenses, and, in the streets of the great European cities, man saw released woman, and shivered at the reflection of himself in his own ideal. From "Wipers" to London, from Verdun to Paris, the preacher sees these things, like the man who was a king in Jerusalem. But to see a disease is not necessarily to possess the remedy for it, though, indeed, in the present instance the manifestation of the disease is, in a measure. its own destruction. Materialism like the dragon Tiamat, of the Babylonish legend, swells with the inflation of its own sensuous vanity, only to meet its doom at the hands of Merodach, the god of light.

What, then, is the remedy? Merodach, the readers of the legend will remember, gave Tiamat of his own to eat, with the result that he burst of a surfeit of his iniquity. But there is another way, the way preached by the Galilean prophet. This surely is what Mrs. Eddy means in writing, on page 296 of Science and Health, "Either here or hereafter, suffering or Science must destroy all illusions regarding life and mind, and regenerate material sense and self. The old man with his deeds must be put off. Nothing sensual or sinful is immortal. The death of a false material sense and of sin, not the death of organic matter, is what reveals man and Life, harmonious, real, and eternal." The Babylonian moralist, writing centuries before the Christian era, could not grasp the larger significance of the truth the Galilean prophet was to preach and demonstrate in Palestine. With all his vision it was impossible for him to free himself from the Eastern conception of woman. It has taken the Christian Church a considerable time to begin to do that. And had it not been for the discipline and agony of Armageddon, the lesson might have taken still longer in learning.

As it is all humanity that is at present capable of learning the lesson has assimilated it. It has learned it in the delirium of the trenches, in the agony of the hospitals, in the sensuous pleasures of the great cities by day, in the unveiling of the nights. And, when all has been said and done, it goes back to the serpent and the tree. It is the old story of the man and the woman in the gateway of Eden

Australian Soldier and Bolshevism

THE vigorous, if not too law-abiding, action recently taken by a large number of returned soldiers and their sympathizers at Brisbane, Queensland, against certain Bolshevist elements in the community is a significant commentary on the claim made in certain quarters that revolutionary socialism, in one form or another, was "sweeping the country." The history of the incident may be outlined in a few words. Permission had been granted by the Brisbane police for a Labor procession, intended to represent a protest against the continuance of the Federal War Precautions Act, but on a definite promise being given by the Industrial Council that no red flags would be carried. The Industrial Council adhered faithfully to its engagement, but, as the procession was in progress, its ranks were invaded by a large force, chiefly Russians, who carried red flags and at once took control of the proceedings. This led to rioting, in which a returned soldier was attacked, and, as news of the incident spread abroad, returned men from all over Brisbane flocked to a given rendezvous and thence proceeded to make organized attacks on the headquarters of the Rus-

Every effort was made by the police to quell the disturbances, but it was not until the acting Premier, Mr. E. A. Theodore, had issued a vigorous statement, in which he gave assurance that the government would not tolerate disloyal or seditious action by the Russian or any other element in the country, that order was restored. The returned soldiers, moreover, were evidently determined to make their position perfectly clear. They called a meeting, and passed a resolution declaring their determination that the fruits of victory should not be wasted "in the interests of the Bolsheviki and other extremists," pledging themselves to unity of action, and urging the authorities to intern or deport all Bolshevist Russians and their sympathizers. Not content with this, a deputation subsequently waited on the Premier, asking him to take immediate and drastic action to deal with all disloyalists "such as Bolsheviki, I. W. W. members, and Sinn Feiners." And the whole incident culminated in a large and enthusiastic assembly of loyal citizens, called by the Mayor of Brisbane, which met in the market place, and affirmed its "unswerving loyalty to the King and

The chief significance of the whole incident lies, of course, in the fact that if "advanced views" are to be looked for anywhere in Australia they are to be looked for in Queensland. Labor has been at the head of affairs for a considerable time, whilst, on more than one occasion, during the past few years, the state government has shown itself restive, to a very marked extent, under the war control of the federal government. The fact of the matter is that in Australia, as in every other part of the British Empire, the sober common sense of the "British workman," using that term in its broadest meaning, is gradually making itself felt. The British workman is ready and willing to go to great lengths in defense of what he regards as his rights, but he is never found for long on the side of the extremist. By degrees, in different parts of the Empire, he is, today, making known his views in regard to bolshevism, and they are, with remarkable uniformity, quite definitely hostile.

Motion-Picture Captions

Easily within two decades, the world has witnessed, contemporaneously with the development of the automobile, the motor boat, and the aeroplane, the evolution, possibly almost to the point of perfection, of the mechanism of the motion picture. Viewed in its relation to art and education, it cannot be denied that the discovery and development of this particular device, embracing within it the possibilities of reaching, in the dissemination of patriotic propaganda, for instance, millions of people at almost the same time, has been of great public benefit. In almost countless ways, also, it has been found to be at once valuable in general educational work, and as a means of entertainment, always reasonably cheap and usually wholesome. But the patron of even the better motion-picture houses, it will be admitted, has recently, at least, and probably oftener than heretofore, had occasion to comment, either introspectively or audibly, upon what seems to be a tendency, on the part of those who are nominated, by what right and for what reason it is somewhat difficult to conjecture, as writers or editors of the descriptive captions and explanatory "inserts" employed to guide, amuse, instruct, confuse, or perhaps disgust those who are seeking a quiet hour of enter-

Patrons of motion-picture houses, it may be assumed, prefer, after being apprised, by means of information cheerfully volunteered, of the name of the producing company, the name of the author of the play or plot, the name of the scenario writer, the name of the director, the name of the photographer, the copyright date, and the reassuring fact that the whole production has been approved by an appropriate and dignified board, to exercise at least a modicum of ingenuity and speculation in following the exhibition of the picture itself. But it is just because they are being denied this privilege, and are being forced, if they continue to seek recreation and amusement where motion pictures are shown, to become the victims of the humor of those who are not humorists, the wit of those who are not wise, and the preachments of those who are not pious, interspersed with thinly veiled profanity and vulgarity, that protests, unmistakable in their import, and apparently increasing in volume, are being heard.

The neighborhood motion-picture theater has, in recent years, become a popular evening resort of families. With important changes and epochal upheavals in the experiences of millions of people of the United States soon to be realized with the closing of the saloon, the neighborhood theater, logically, should become more popular than ever, and consequently better patronized. But if it is to realize this new importance, or retain the prestige and support which it has gained, it must cease to offend by failure tactfully to assume that its audiences are capable of forming fairly correct and intelligent deductions.

Ambitious producers of motion pictures certainly need not be told that the artistic and educational development of their industry has scarcely more than begun. But there is need, perhaps, to impress the fact that the present, possibly more than any previous time, may prove the test of popular favor and regard. The period appears to be that of the exploitation of the theatrical stars of greatest magnitude, the employment of devices and situations designed to thrill patient audiences which follow the serial through its many "continued-in-our-next" finales, and at least an apparent effort to reproduce a few of the classics. It seems probable, however, that the astute and observing producer, or his outpost at the box office, will soon discover, if he has not already discovered, that a false note has been struck. It certainly is out of harmony with the general scheme.

The Crown of Smyrna

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." The world has read those words in the Greek original or in innumerable translations for almost two thousand years, but except in a limited, perhaps in a local way it has never understood the marvelous imagery with which the Eastern writer impressed his meaning upon his audience. The author of the letters to the Seven Churches was writing his letters in the days when the cities in which these churches were placed palpitated with the full tide of life, and writing to Smyrna he seized upon the great natural characteristic of the city to impress his meaning upon his readers.

As the sailor approached the ancient city from the sea, he saw the white houses clambering up the great hill in the background, and as they neared the summit becoming fewer and fewer amidst the gardens and the cypress groves until the famous crown was bound, in a circlet of walls and battlements, round the brow of the hill. Every trader who came into Smyrna, in the little coasting vessels or the greater galleys, every merchant who rode into it with the caravans through the pass which entered the valley where the great Anatolian trade route finally reached the sea, knew the crown of Smyrna, and carried the story of its glories over the seas with him or back along the Hermus Valley into the hinterland. Centuries before the writer on Patmos had used his famous metaphor, Apollonius of Tyana, renowned among the mystics of Asia, had bidden the people of Smyrna "to wear a crown of men rather than a crown of porticoes, and pictures, and gold beyond the standard of mankind." Only an occasional scholar heeds the words of Apollonius today. But every man coming up the gulf today, and seeing for the first time, Mount Pagos, crowned with its ruined eastle and clustering houses, recalls the words of the writer of Revelation, and is carried back in memory through the story of the great Greek city which was founded as a Hellenic colony a thousand years before the Christian era.

That was Æolian Smyrna, but Æolian Smyrna was seized almost immediately by the Ionian Greeks, only to become the battlefield in turn of a struggle with the Lydian Empire, whose way it blocked to the sea. The old kings of Asia, in the centuries before the Christian era, did their work thoroughly when they went to war, and so it came about that, somewhere about six centuries before Christ, King Alyattes of Sardis took Smyrna, and destroyed it as completely as one day the Romans were to destroy Jerusalem. The province of Smyrna, it is true, still existed, but a province without its free city was no part of a Hellenic colony. The collection of straggling villages which represented Smyrna during the next three hundred years possessed no organic government of its own, and it was not until King Lysimachus had adopted the design which had grown in the mind of Alexander, that the new city on the gulf came into being. This was the city to which the writer to the Seven Churches sent his letter, the city which Apollonius declared was the most beautiful under the sun, the city the splendor of whose buildings was described by Ælius Aristides, the city of the Golden Street which, circling the hill, connected the Temple of Zeus, on the west, with that of Cybele, on the east. Here the primitive church established the second of the churches of Asia to which the letters in Revelation were written, and here after almost three thousand years the blue and white stripes of the flag of Greece have been hoisted as the mandatory of the League of Nations, as the Æolian Greeks, ten centuries before the Christian era, probably raised their standard after the manner of the owl of Athens or bull of Boeotia.

When the writer on Patmos wrote his letter, Smyrna, of course, had ceased to be a Hellenic colony. Rome had stretched out its mighty arm and established a conventus there. Still, in spite of the materiality of the Jews and the speculativeness of the Greeks, of whom Paul was one day to write, "For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom," the church prospered. It might be poor in the things of this world, but it was rich in spirituality. As a result the heavy hand of the persecuting Cæsar struck at it, with the result that, in the year 155, its famous bishop, Polycarp, was martyred. Gradually, however, as the grasp of Rome relaxed, the fortunes of Smyrna faded. The Eastern emperors in Constantinople were unable to extend to it the protection of the old Cæsars in Rome. Turkish raiders and Turkish soldiers began to descend upon it for plunder, so that when the Knights Hospitalers seized it, in the Fourteenth Century, it was already falling into ruin. What was left of it was wiped out as completely by the Mongol tide of conquest as the earlier city had been blotted out by the Lydians. When the soldiers of Timur had stormed the citadel, the massacre was so complete that for a second time Smyrna had ceased to exist.

Timur came and Timur went, and when he went the Greeks came back into the ruins to reestablish their city with that wonderful persistence which has marked their history in the Levant. Gradually under the Turkish caliphs the city regained something of its former prosperity. The Turks themselves never made their home in it, so that it is known to them to this day as "giaour Ismir." Little by little, however, it became a great portwith a great trade in spite of all the neglect which the politicians of Stamboul could show it, and all the persecution which the religious sheiks could bestow upon it. At the outbreak of the war the Sanjak of Smyrna possessed some 753,000 inhabitants, of whom 449,000 were Greeks and 219,000 Ottomans. But Greece had never ceased to claim her ancient colony, and one of her most insistent demands at the Peace Council was the restoration to her of the Smyrna Sanjak. This demand has now been granted by the Peace Council. An allied fleet lies anchored in the gulf within sight of the broken crown of Smyrna which still circles the head of Pagos, whilst a Greek army of occupation has landed in the town to preserve order in the province which, after all the centuries, is to be again administered by Greece.

Notes and Comments

Some months ago we had occasion to refer to the omission of the St. Joseph Gazette, of St. Joseph, Missouri, to acknowledge in any way an article taken from our columns. The St. Joseph Gazette has now taken another long article, intact to the very title, from the columns of this paper, again without any acknowledgment whatsoever. We suggest politely that the habit is one to be discontinued. The incident reminds us of a certain statement of a certain prime minister who had voted for one subsidy, and was promptly requested to vote for several more, "One subsidy certainly, a system of subsidies certainly not." We leave it to the St. Joseph Gazette to apply this observation in the way indicated by Captain Bunsby.

IT TAKES no iota from the gratitude and honor with which they regard their returned soldiers that many Bostonians are not in sympathy with the City Councilman who wants to change the name of Copley Square to "Place de Marne" or "Place Verdun," or regard as anything but silly his argument that the artist John Singleton Copley was not remarkable as a patriot. The Revolution took place a long time ago; the gentleman who presented the site of Copley Square to the city stipulated that it should be so named; while the name itself has become, one might fairly say, more associated with Boston than with the artist, and quite too closely associated to be readily or sensibly discarded. In all such questions it is the part of wisdom to remember Davy Crockett's rule of conduct: Be sure you're right, then go ahead. So far as one may judge from conversation with individuals, the returned soldiers are much more sensible about these questions than many of those who are now trying to honor them.

THE toy-makers of the United States have been holding a fair in Chicago, not, one judges, for the general public, but for all those commercially interested in the toy market of next winter's holiday season. There were exhibited toy aeroplanes that fly by winding up a spring. and others that navigate the air by the power of their miniature electric motors, within the limits set by the wire that connects them with an electric light socket; also little tanks that climb obstacles on the floor, and a ferry boat on wheels that crosses the imaginary harbor till it bumps the opposite wall and then mechanically turns round and comes back. Aeroplanes and tanks are, perhaps, most obvious subjects for mechanical toys, but it is a pity that so many children's playthings are apparently to savor of war. American toy-makers, however, excel in mechanical toys. They now expect that toys of all kinds "made in America" will predominate in the holiday toy shops.

REDUCED to practical information about all the roads in the United States over which some motorist may decide to travel, the nine volumes of the Automobile Blue Book show that the present range of the touring car covers about 500,000 miles of roads, which is about 20,000 more than were listed in 1918. The scouts, so called, who drove their cars all over the country in gathering information for the prospective tourist, found also some 187,114 miles of road that had to be recharted because of recent road building. Motorists, of course, are well acquainted with the Blue Book, but to the simple pedestrians the pleasure they take in studying it is as the joy of the small gardener in a seed catalogue to one who sees no fun in digging holes to plant vegetables that he can so much more comfortably buy at the market. And a seed catalogue is a mere paragraph compared to the Automobile Blue Book. with its 600,000 words of general information about things and places.

ONE of the simplifications proposed by the latest list of simplified spellings is the elimination from usage of the big word "advertisement" and the substitution therefor of the little word "ad": and in this case one may believe that the change will not be difficult to bring about. It falls pat with the common tendency for some time past to speak of an "ad" instead of an "advertisement." One can make the change, for example, in Addison's remark about "ads" in the Tatler, and not be particularly shocked to read that "the great art in wfiting ads is the finding out a proper method to catch the reader's eye." which goes to show incidentally that even in the days of Queen Anne the basic factor of this art was perfectly well established. As Addison remarked also, "a man that is by no means big enough for the gazette, may easily creep into the ads," although nowadays one would hardly say that creeping described the invariable manner of entrance.
